Newfoundland

Newfoundland, Britain's oldest Colony, was discovered by John Cabot in 1497. The first Charter was granted to Sir Humphrey Gilbert in 1583. Newfoundland is a self=governing Colony, has its own House of Assembly and makes its own laws. The population by the last census was 242,619 including Newfoundland Labrador. St. John's, the capital, has a Population of over 32,000.

Newfoundland offers great attraction to visitors, and is fast earning the reputation of being an ideal country for sportsmen and tourists

Within easy access of the mainland, it is reached by thousands of visitors during the Summer months, who are pleased with the sport they may enjoy and charmed with the rugged scenery.

As a health resort Newfoundland is rapidly coming to the front, and the increasing number of visitors every Season shows that the bracing air and invigorating sea=breezes have a wonderfully beneficial effect on those who are run-down from overwork or are in need of a change.

There are different routes by which the visitor can reach Newfoundland. Those who desire an all= sea passage from New York will find excellent accommodation on any of the "Red Cross" Line of steamers, calling at Halifax both going and coming. From Boston you can take the "Plant" Line or Rail to Halifax and connect there for St. John's.

Philadelphians can come direct in the Allan Liners, or go via New York. Residents of Montreal can come direct by the popular "Black Diamond" Liners, or take rail to Sydney, crossing from there to Port aux Basques by one of the Reid Nfld. Co's palatial steamers, and continuing on the Cross= country express, giving them an opportunity of seeing the interior.
